A palette based on a dark-fade neutral background pulled from the DLF olive/green. With the purple bar, the emphasis is placed on a classic interpretation of the DLF colors. The dark bar and the dark top of the page make of higher contrast between that and the white space where the content resides.

Design 02

The only wash background out of all of the provided designs, given their unpopularity last time, I thought it was important to show at least one wash not done in that strange green color from last time. This time it is a lighter shade of the DLF olive, which becomes much more tan. The fact that the background is a wash does allow for the logo to exist in its original state, rather than a punch out.

Utilizes two-tone purple for the background element -- contrasting the DLF purple (slightly more red) with a purple that utilizes more blue. This is the only dark colored design that still fades to white in order to maintain that "vertigo" feeling, but with more of a gradual transition in the hopes it will translate better to other monitors. The main colors of this design are variations on the DLF colors, pushed slightly cooler.

Design 04
This design emphasizes the purple of the DLF logo, coupling it in the banner with a pale wash version of the DLF olive, as well as introduces a cool sky blue to function as a counter balance to the palette's inherent yellow/red slant. Treatment of the top bookmark color once again allows for the DLF logo to exist in it's 'original' colors.

Design 05

This design utilizes a fade that moves from DLF purple to DLF olive and, unlike some of the other purple fades, relies on two dark colors rather than a dark and light to create the gradient. Since the use of the DLF colors are prevalent in the outside frame, the inner frame utilizes both the goldrod and a pale blue to introduce a bit of contrast.

This design is built on the approach of having a neutral background -- here moving from a slate color to something closer to DLF olive -- and then relegating the content area of much more vibrant punch-up colors. The introduction of a yellowish blue, which is then echoed in a very pale blue, interacts with the other highlight colors which are goldenrod and a punched up version of the DLF olive.

This design is built on the approach of having a neutral background -- here moving from a slate color to something closer to bone -- and then relegating the content area of much more vibrant punch-up colors. Here the goldenrod, the spicy pumpkin, and a brightened version of the DLF green, which is also darkened in the logo tab. This design specifically emphasizes the bookmark by having it start at the stop of the page and then cut off at the end of community headlines.
